

How a sale works, start to finish

Your shop already lets customers browse the real gear catalogue, add items to a cart and reach the checkout screen. The last step to go live is connecting a payment provider so cards and PromptPay are actually charged. Here is exactly what happens on every order.

The five steps are identical whichever method the customer picks — PromptPay, card or Apple / Google Pay. The money settles into your Thai bank account; you never handle card details yourself.

Choose a payment provider

The provider is the company that actually moves the money (like an online card machine). These four all work in Thailand and cover PromptPay, cards and Apple / Google Pay. Fees are per successful sale — pick the one that fits how you sell.

Provider	Prompt-Pay	Cards	Apple / Google Pay	Card fee	PromptPay fee	Best for
Stripe	Yes	Yes	Yes	~3.65%	~1.65%	Visiting divers; cleanest checkout & one-tap wallets
Opn Payments (was Omise)	Yes	Yes	Yes	~3.65%	~1.65%	Widest Thai wallets (TrueMoney, LINE Pay); negotiable
2C2P	Yes	Yes	Yes	Quote	Quote	Higher volume, card installments, enterprise
GB Prime Pay (now Xendit)	Yes	Yes	Partial	~3.2%	~0.8%	Thai SMEs; cheapest PromptPay; simple setup

Indicative rates, before 7% VAT and before any volume discount — confirm the current pricing on each provider's site. Left out on purpose: PayPal (no PromptPay) and Adyen (great, but aimed at big enterprises).

What you'll need to switch it on

- A registered Thai company (or sole proprietor) and a Thai bank account for THB payouts
- KYC documents (company papers + ID) — approval is usually a few business days
- Your live domain and real contact details; payouts land in your account in about 1–3 days

Our recommendation

Start with Stripe if most sales are to visiting divers — foreign cards, Apple / Google Pay and PromptPay in one checkout, paid out in THB. Pick Opn Payments if you want the deepest Thai wallet coverage and room to negotiate fees as you grow. Either way, the shop flow on page 1 stays exactly the same.
